COVER

We've broken a CATS taboo this month by putting on the cover photographer Bob Taylor's little human model as well as his kittens. They're from Cordell, Oklahoma.

THE DAY OF THE CAT

We admirers of the cat are fortunate that today we "belong." A glance at the typical American home scene as portrayed in the current Life or Look or Ladies' Home Journal will show that the cat has become an integral part of the American family as seen by the American advertiser.

This is all to the good. And we can be joyful that these manufacturers of America's ideals have recognized the worth of the cat to the human family.

Our once-proud but lonely status as the capitalist equivalent of "deviationist" cat lovers has fast changed, and we find ourselves in the unexpected role of leaders in the group drive to embrace the cat.

It's fun, and we must make the most of it, despite the two changes in our thinking which it may require.

First, let's take the chips off our shoulders. The cat is king—and no more must we be on the defensive when we announce our admiration for him.

Second, let's accept the responsibility that the cat has earned for us. In our presentation of the cat to the world let us try to sift fable from fact. In our zeal to do good for the cat let us support only such cat organizations as have proved themselves true charities, but support them well. In the world of the Fancy, while retaining if we must our divergence of procedures, let us strive for uniformity in standards. And, where we can, let us unite in telling the world about ourselves.

Above all, let us remember that our victory is far from complete. Nor, in the name of the Cat Who Walks By Himself will we ever want to bring all men under our banner.

But let us rejoice that the day has come when as in Bubastis we, cats and cat lovers, again may hold high our heads amid the earned respect of all society.

TWELVE POUNDS OF TAFFY

Dear Editors:

Each month we receive CATS Magazine, we like it better and better. We are constantly telling everyone we meet about the wonderful magazine we found.

We are enclosing a picture of our yellow and white cat called Taffy. He is only one year old and weighs twelve pounds already.

Thanks again for a good job.

LITERARY LIGHT

Dear Editors:

About the time the books, Black Beauty and Beautiful Joe came into print, the SPCA in 1895 met and felt a need for a book in defense of our friend, the cat. Pussy Meow, by Louise Patterson, was born as a result.

I first encountered this wonderful story as a child in first grade. I was re-introduced to it when they razed the old country school house which I attended some forty years ago.

I am trying to interest some one to have it reprinted or presented to this generation in some form. If we could once again interest our children in this type of literature, I feel they would gain so much more than they are getting from comic books.

MUSICAL NOTE

Dear Editors:

In "Hey Diddle" by Ruth W. Stevens (CATS, April 1959), she writes about several pieces of music in which cats play a major or minor role. Add to it Ravel's little opera, "L'enfant et les sortiléges." It is about a little boy who torments his cat and the consequences thereof.

LOST AND FOUND

Dear Editors:

Last October our dear Red Persian cat we had had for fourteen years passed away. We had him laid to rest in the Rosedale Pet Cemetery near Verona. During those fourteen years he was our constant companion and traveled to New England, Florida, and the West each time we went.

We despaired of ever finding another Red to take his place. Looking through your magazine, we noticed a cattery near us and drove over to see if we could find another Sandy. The owners of the cattery were wonderful and showed us a sweet male just like the one we had lost. We took him home with us.

We find that he is doing so many things just like Sandy and we hope Rusty will enjoy traveling too.

Many thanks to CATS Magazine for helping us locate Rusty.

SMITTEN BY A KITTEN

Dear Editors:

Be a gal who would write letters to a pet magazine! "Never, no never," I quoted with mental apologies to Gilbert and Sullivan. Now, bewitched by a Burmese baby, I find myself doing things I vowed I'd never do. Hear now this thin voice crying in the wilderness of feline fancy, "all wonders are still to be known by he who has not yet found magic transformed into cat shape."

THIS IS ANDY

Dear Editors:

This is Andy who came to our door five years ago, an unkempt, neglected stray kitten, with rickets and a hunch in his back.

Loving care, combined with massive ingestions of fish, beef kidney and lamb liver, has transformed Andy into a very gentlemanly chap.

He appreciates his home as only a stray can, goes outdoors only for essentials and gets his exercise by romping through the house with his sparring and sleeping partner, a Siamese Blue Point named Ramar Singh of Klump.

By brushing he can be bribed to strike any desired pose and is an inveterate ham when the camera appears.

His gravest fault is his habit of pushing clocks, books and bric-a-brac from the headboard of the bed on Sunday morning to awaken his slaves.

In the five years he has owned us, we have all been very happy.

MAKES US SING

Dear Editors:

The R. T. French Company has subscribed to CATS Magazine for several years and the material it contains has been of great assistance to me as correspondent for our Pet Institute Department. Especially, Mrs. Wolfram's articles on proper nutrition have been vitally important in my research work. True, 78% of the some odd 18,000 yearly letters I receive are specifically regarding feathered vertebrates; all other requests pertain to cats, dogs, aquaria species, etc., and I do not know how often I have looked up back issues of CATS for your comments and suggestions.

THE CITY OF CATS

by Eileen Davis

Outside of a shop in Paris with the curious name of Le Weekendnevendpascher every evening as the sun goes down a man stands holding out his arms to a large gray cat. The cat jumps to the man's arms. Passersby smile and nod, and murmur, "un très joli chat!" Some of them stop to pat the cat, as the man, who is wearing a gray smock and is the proprietor of the shop, is also doing. After a few minutes of this he puts the cat in the shop for the night where there is food and a "cat corner" and goes home or to the restaurant for dinner.

This gray cat is rather interesting. He is a mouse-colored Shorthair, no white on him anywhere. He has golden eyes, not green, weighs probably about eight pounds, is in good flesh, is very self-confident and complacent in the shop or out, and has around his neck a slender cord with a metal disk, probably not of silver, but certainly of silver color, marked with the identifying words on one side, Le weekend, and on the other side, Tutti. The proprietor does not want this cat to be lost; he is extremely fond of him, and when the cat leaps to his arms in the little ceremony at nightfall the man takes obvious and unashamed pleasure in his affection for the cat. So he has put a silvery disk around the cat's neck; if the cat should wander, he wants someone to return him. He does not have to be very anxious that anyone will mistreat the cat, because this is France, and this is Paris: the city of cats.

In the shop next to Le Weekendnevendpascher, in the window among huge and delicate Chinese jars, there slumbers through the afternoons a mighty tiger cat whose stripes stop in time to permit a snowy vest and paws. In the pharmacy next door to that, there is a black cat with the slender legs and the short, very flexible tail so often seen in the famous posters of Toulouse-Lautrec. In the café on the corner there is a yellow tiger cat, and at the hotel a pure white totally deaf male with one sky-blue and one grape-green eye.

This is a city where everyone has a cat, everyone! And it is a city where gentleness toward animals is almost a passion. If you want to make a friend in Paris go into the shop where the cat curls himself on the counter, go into the café where cats are kept to eat the scraps and to keep the place free from rodents, go into the laundry where there is a box of kittens in the window and ask: What is your cat's name?

They call them Simond, Pitou, Fregoli, Le Loup; they call them Claudonne, Blanchette, Domino, Simplette. Two twin kittens were named Zizouille and Miquette. There was, of course, Tutti of the bargain shop. On the beach at Nice a Frenchwoman told me that her cat was named The King of England, and there was also one called Marshal Tito. On an island in the river Seine there is a cemetery for both dogs and cats.

The cats of Paris differ, in some respects, from American cats; and both differ again from English cats which are very large, well cared for, and sedate, can and do sleep in the streets of London without fear. England has severe penalties for the mistreatment of cats, and in Paris there is a tenderness toward them that is

KITTEN GAMES

Our kitten in a playful mood,
When hunting game is very shrewd.
He stalks his catnip mouse as though
It were a ruthless, jungle foe.
He hides within his shadowed lair,
Concealed by flounce of our best
chair,
Then pounces forth, upon his prey,
Red flannel mouse, or somber grey.
He's booby-trapped our once safe
house,
With numerous balls. A bone or mouse
May trip us any time of day,
If he's engaged in kitten play.
But when he tires of "pounce and jump,"
He rests, a helpless, boneless lump
Of soft and clinging kitten guile,
Upon my lap to nap a while.

—Gladys Cornell

TO A CERTAIN CAT

When friends are introduced to you
And told your name is Annie-Boy,
Their puzzlement demands a clue.
Then I explain with chuckling joy
That in your kitten days you had
The name of Annie. Later it Became apparent we must add
An extra syllable to fit
The fact, for names should always be Consistent with biology!

RUNAWAY CAT

*Oh come, little cat, come down from
the hill,
For I am so lonely, the house is so
still.
The grass is too long there, the trees
are too tall,
And you are so young, you are so small.*

*I hear your faint voice as I stand in the door.
You say you are not a child anymore.
But oh, little cat, all my children
are grown,
When you run away, then I am alone.*

*So come, little cat, come down from
the hill,
For I am so lonely, the house is so
still.*

RAKE'S PROGRESS

Sunday

A gaunt gray cat I have never seen
Cries and plucks at the kitchen screen.

Skim-milk-and-bread is poverty
stuff,
But the creature is hungry; it's good enough.

Tuesday

He gobbles oatmeal, growling aside,
But he leaves a little; he has his pride.

Thursday

He sits on the doorstep; he does not beg;
Refuses oatmeal; takes scrambled egg.

Saturday

He suddenly slithers between my feet
And gets inside. Oh, let him eat—
As soon as he finishes sniffing about—
From the cocker's dish, then put him out.

Sunday

When I get the paper he comes in,
blandly,
Strolling beside me, purring grandly.
His paw comes away with a tuft of hair
As he drives the cocker out of his chair.

—Elijah L. Jacobs

TO TAMA

Light of heart and foot was she Demurely wise
And softly fleet.

I think she walks eternity
With dreaming eyes;
Her dancing feet

Weave arabesques, that while she purrs

Within some heaven that is hers.

—Elizabeth Laracque
(New York Herald Tribune)

OF CATS

If cats have flaws,
It is because
Their playful paws
Are tipped with claws.
A Pharaoh's prize—
Their virtue lies
In jeweled eyes
So ancient wise.

—Ruby Lytle

CATS I HAVE REARED

*Some people remark, "I love kittens
—but that's
"All over the minute they turn into cats."*

*"They just aren't dainty when no longer small,
"As soon as they're big I don't want them at all!"*

*With this queer opinion I cannot agree—
My pets through the long years grow
dearer to me,
For kittens I play with may lighten
my strife,
But cats I have reared are a part of my life.*

—Georgette Weiser

NIGHT CAT

*Last night a big black cat
Went through the sky—
I watched its wide gold eye.
From where I sat
I saw the veil
Of silvery sprinkles on its tail
And as the wind-blown pines
Began to stir,
I heard it purr.*

JUST LIKE HER

All up and down the streets of town,
Live Susanna's kittens,
And everyone is marked like her;
Grey, with white mittens.

Everyone wants one of them,
Because they are so cunning,
And gentle as Susanna is,
Especially at funning.

We've given them for Christmas gifts,
And every birthday party;
For having kittens just like her,
Susanna is a smarty!

GREEN MOUNDS PET CEMETERY

by Adelaide Blanton

Many people leave large sums of money for the care and feeding of their pet cats. Their wills have stated that certain set amounts are to be used for the benefit of their beloved Cuddles, Susie Silver, Cindy, or whatever affectionate name had been given to the cat.

But pet lovers in many areas have gone much farther and planned a pet cemetery for small animals. One in Florida is called the Green Mounds Pet Cemetery, located on the west coast on Highway No. 19, between Clearwater and St. Petersburg. The founder, Dr. E. B. Dibbel, is very fond of pets himself and is also a veterinarian friend to all animals. The cemetery has now been operating for about five or six years.

When a person or a family has a cat that has been a member of the household for a long time, the pain of its departure can be lessened by having a nice place of burial, where the grave is taken care of and may be visited whenever desired.

Green Mounds Pet Cemetery will accept cats and dogs and any other small animal pet for burial. It is a rare and unusual attraction for cat lovers and owners of Florida, but its acceptance of pets is not restricted to Florida.

There are now nearly one hundred cats buried at Green Mounds, and over five hundred dogs, as well as parakeets, a pet rabbit, and one monkey.

Each grave is supplied with a flat stone marker bearing the cat's name and dates of its life. Some of the markers carry a picture of the cat built in the stone marker.

The mounds are built high above the water level insuring absolute dryness during all seasons.

The remains of a departed kitten may rest forever with other little friends of his own kind in dry undisturbed peace, with a green carpet over the grave. It is the sort of a place where your kitten would have liked to romp with its playmates.

There is a large poster board where pictures with dates and names of departed pets are exhibited. It is amusing to read the many interesting and affectionate names, such as Satin, Cindy, Taboo, Cuddles, Rinky, Rowdy Girl, Ginger, Muggs, Jinx, Tick and Ticker.

Some of them have poems written by their mistresses or masters and posted under the pictures.

Dr. Dibbel says that cat owners are more sentimentally attached to their pets than owners of other pets. Sometimes the grief is softened when an owner has a "cattery" of six or a dozen other cats, then their affection can be shifted to the rest of the family. He also states that the Persian breed seems to be the most popular among devoted cat lovers.

The Cemetery also has a Crematory for those who wish to have their cats cremated. For those using the crematory system, an Urn Garden is available for burial of the ashes. Small ceramic boxes are used and placed for storage in niches in the Urn Garden. Engraved name plates identify the urn recesses. Safe and permanent storage is guaranteed. The niche rental is $2.00 per year, but a payment of $20.00 insures perpetual care. At the entrance of the Urn Garden, there is a large plaque which reads—

"Resting here in quiet and cool peace are cremains of departed pets. A thoughtful last gesture in recognition of the loyalty and love of the animal member of the family."

The cost of a cat's funeral varies according to the style box you choose, and whether it has plain or tufted lining.

There is a ground level burying spot where plastic cloth is used instead of the burying box, which is less expensive.

A Burial Certificate is given the owner of every pet that is buried in Green Mounds Pet Cemetery. The special Certificate prepared for cats has a printed message such as might be written by the departed cat to its mistress or master, which reads:

DO NOT FORGET ME!

I linked my life with yours from — to —. During my short stay on this earth I loved and adored you. I may have seemed reserved at times but I always, in my way, sympathized with you in your sadness and joined with you in your happiness. I tried hard to be friends with your friends and to be dignified and unobtrusive in their presence. I tried, always, to please you. If I could have left a last message it would try to have you understand that you should not cry over me, but I would ask, and this so desperately, that you never forget me. I would thank you, too, for your thoughtfulness in placing me at rest in Lot No. — Mound No. — in Green Mounds Pet Cemetery on this date:

Signed
(by an inked foot print of a cat)

Those requesting that their pet cat's body be cremated are given a similar certificate with the picture of the Urn Garden on the back of the certificate and a similar message.

There is also a beautiful Belfry where appropriate carillon music is played during a Pet's funeral.

Any devoted cat lover would appreciate a visit to this beautiful and unusual Green Mounds Pet Cemetery.

One of the carefully maintained mounds which provide resting places of beauty and dignity for departed pets. And, below, the urn garden where the ashes of cremated pets are interred.

THE WISE MOUSER

by Christina Robinson

Can animals think?

This question, which has been tossed about for uncounted years, might never have been answered for me, had it not been for Zipper, our small son's yellow cat. Now, as far as I am concerned, the matter is settled.

My husband has no love for cats. Our youngest had long begged for a kitten but, argued my husband, our half-shepherd, half-unknown, wholly wonderful dog Duke was quite enough in the way of pets. Even the boy's plea, "Duke's too big. He knocks me over. I want something I can hold," failed to soften his resolve.

It took stark tragedy to change his mind. Duke was killed, accidentally, and my husband came home to a middle-sized boy trying to hold back his tears and a small boy sobbing his heart out. The next evening, when he came home, there was a tiny ball of yellow fur in his overcoat pocket. And so Zipper entered our life.

I wish that I could report that the kitten's endearing tricks softened my husband's heart and they became devoted friends. Nothing could be less true. Zipper never failed to irritate my husband and the kitten responded with a vast indifference which, as he grew into a cat, changed to a definite dislike although he followed the rest of us about as though he were a puppy. When my husband is in the house his chair is sacred to his convenience—no one would dream of taking it. No one, that is, except Zipper. Evening after evening my husband found the cat curled in the soft depths of this chair, evening after evening there was the resounding slap with the folded paper, the angry "Get out!" the equally angry meow and hiss as the outraged animal stalked bristling from the room, disdaining to claim any other chair. Unusually ready and apparently eager to respond to all other training, Zipper refused absolutely to obey in this one thing and there grew up between man and beast that hopeless antagonism which would have been distressing, had it not been so comical.

Naturally enough, the ease with which Zipper could be trained rested upon probation. "Good cat, Zipper," with a pat on the top of his head instantly brought forth a tremendous purring, a long, self-conscious stretch, and the knowledge on our part that the lesson in behavior was now thoroughly mastered. So we were not surprised when he brought us his first mouse and waited to be praised and petted before he devoured it.

But there were not enough mice about the place, and now began the routine which should give pause to everyone of the animals-can-not-think school.

Across two vacant lots from us there is an old barn which still must contain enough remnants of hay and grain to attract mice. This barn Zipper made his private hunting ground during his habitual stroll before bedtime.

Evening after evening he brought his catch home. To signal that he had been successful he gave forth a peculiar call, savage and triumphant, altogether unmistakable, as he sat before the closed back door with his mouse at his feet. Usually the children were either in bed or studying in their rooms, so it fell to me to open the door, exclaim enthusiastically "Good cat, Zipper!" pat him on the head and retreat before the feast began.

This all seemed nonsense to my husband but he merely smiled tolerantly when I left whatever I was doing and, regardless of whether we were alone or had guests, went to give the hunter his due.

All this might have gone on and on had not the time of Zipper's arrival with his prey grown later and later, perhaps the number of mice was diminishing. There were times now when the unearthly call came just as we were putting out the lights, when we were getting ready for bed, when we had already dropped off for the night. Being a light sleeper, I managed for a time to slip out of bed and down the stairs unnoticed, to open the door noiselessly, to whisper my praise and sneak back. But then there arrived the inevitable.

"Damn that cat!" awakened me one night and I knew that the screech had awakened my husband first. Before I could move he was already down the stairs, flinging open the door, yelling at Zipper. Then came the sound of the garbage can being opened and the running of water as he scrubbed his hand.

"There!" he said as he slid back into his bed with all the triumph of a general after a battle won. "That ought to teach him not to yell in the middle of the night."

"Did you throw out the mouse?"

"Of course I threw out the mouse. If that cat can't catch a mouse without bragging all over the neighborhood, let him live out of cans."

I am sure that on the following night my husband stayed awake in order to be the one to go down when the call came.

PART I: THE CELLS

In previous articles the respiratory and the digestive systems were discussed. We learned how the respiratory system extracts oxygen from the air and eliminates the waste carbon dioxide, and how in the digestive system the food that a cat eats is reduced to the essential nutrients for use by the body. In this article we shall discuss the cells, and next month shall deal fully with the circulatory system whose essential task is to transport the oxygen and the nutrients to every part of the body. All three systems have one common purpose and that is to nourish and keep alive every cell that makes up the body of the cat.

The principle parts of the circulatory system are the blood, lymph, arteries, capillaries, veins and heart. The blood carries the nutrients and the oxygen through the arteries and the capillaries. The lymph transfers the nutrients and the oxygen from the capillaries to the cells. All waste products from the cells are transferred back through the lymph to the capillaries of the veins and thereby taken away. The heart is the organ which supplies the motion of the blood. By its pumping action it forces the blood through the arteries and at the same time withdraws the blood containing the wastes back through the veins. It sounds like a very simple operation but it is nonetheless very complicated. It is a very efficient system and without it life would come to an end.

We have previously mentioned cells, but have not discussed what they are and what they do. It is they who receive all the nourishment and it is they who are responsible for the continued living of the cat. As we look at our cats we can see that they have eyes, ears, nose, head, body, legs, tail and all the other things we associate with them. But, it is very hard to believe that the entire body is made up of millions of tiny living cells that are properly grouped together to form all the different and various parts of the body. Not only cats, but all living things—plants, animals, and humans—are composed of cells which make up the whole being. These cells are the secret of the Great Maker and try as he will, man cannot discover the actual makeup of these cells nor can he create a living cell. They are the basis of all life and man will have to be content with the knowledge that they are there. Man knows how they survive and what they are called upon to perform but he will never produce one single living cell from his own knowledge.

What are these mysterious cells? Basically, all cells are made of just about the same materials formed into a semi-fluid viscous substance called protoplasm, but each is arranged just a little differently than others. All those cells which have a common purpose group together to form various parts of the body. There are certain kinds which unite to form the muscles, the bones, the skin, the fur and all the different organs of the body. Each cell has its own particular duty to perform but it is all cells working in harmony that make up the general work of the entire body of the cat.

In each cell, near or at the center, is a round body known as the nucleus. This nucleus could be called the brain of the cell for it appears to control all its activities. Near the nucleus is another small rounded body, the centrosome, which somehow controls the growth and reproduction of the cell. Food particles, wastes, water, and other substances can also be seen, and to make the cell complete, all this is enclosed within a membrane known as the cell-wall. Of course, most cells are so small that they can only be observed through the use of a microscope.

of

All cells are able to add new materials to increase their size. However, after they have reached their normal size they begin to divide and from one cell comes another making two distinct and separate cells each, independent of the other. The process by which this division takes place is not clearly understood but it appears that the centrosome divides first and forces the nucleus to divide in two. With the two centrosomes and the two nuclei separated the cell wall then shrinks together dividing the entire cell into two parts which separate to form two entirely new cells. This process of division is especially evident during the growing cycle of the cat and when it has reached maturity, all growth division stops as if by some magic signal. However, to repair injury or wear and tear, the cells are capable of rebuilding themselves provided too many are not destroyed, for they cannot rebuild organs as a whole. If a cat receives scratches, bites or bruises the cells will build and form new cells or repair themselves. But, if a cat should lose one of its legs or some other full part of its body another one cannot be grown to take its place. Theoretically, a cat grows from a tiny kitten to a fully matured cat with cells to meet all the essential requirements, but it is given only one set and after maturity that is all it will get.

OF THE CAT

In the course of living the cells perform four different processes. Absorption, the taking-in process, enables each cell to absorb food, oxygen and water from the surrounding lymph; assimilation, the adding-to process, whereby materials are added to the protoplasm for ready use; oxidation, the basic metabolism or the using-up process, in which the oxygen unites with other materials in the cell forming heat and bodily power or energy; excretion, the throwing-off process, whereby waste products from oxidation and other changes are passed from the cell to the surrounding lymph. These processes are vital to the cells and through them the cells are able to live and stay alive.

When one considers the intricacies of these tiny cells and the value of oxygen and nutrients to them it makes one stop and think about what each one is doing for the entire cat to help it remain in a state of good health. We can see how much oxygen means to the cells and it would be well to make sure that your cats do receive an ample amount of fresh air. If cats are kept in small surroundings and there are quite a few of them, the pure oxygen supply will be rapidly used up thereby preventing the cats from obtaining the needed fresh oxygen. It would be well to see that the room is well ventilated at all times to insure this supply of essential oxygen.

The other main essential to the cells is good nutrients. In order to obtain these good nutrients a cat must be fed a diet that will assure its getting its needed supply. There is good food rich in all the nutrients and there is food which is not so rich in nutrients. To explain this lets consider meat. Not all parts of meats contain rich protein. No, some parts are very poor. You may be feeding your cat a great quantity of meat but if it is not the variety that has the rich proteins you are just wasting your money and the cat is receiving little or no benefit from it. Try to educate yourself on proper food and its constituents.

In another magazine I have just read the most unconvincing double talk about nutrition it has been my misfortune to encounter. I read the article in its entirety, and more words were used to say nothing than I have ever seen. This article minimized the value of vitamins but, from my own experience I have learned the vital importance that vitamins play. If you do not give your cat the added supplement of vitamins you are inviting disaster. To be explicit, not only do I always give my cats a good vitamin supplement, I have found that it is very necessary to give pregnant or lactating queens a nutritive supplement. The one I use is Nutritive Capsules by Parke-Davis. In doing so you help ward off still-births and undeveloped fetuses. In giving it to growing kittens you will help prevent the crippling of the back legs. To you breeders interested in having healthy cats and strong sturdy kittens never overlook the value of a vitamin supplement to the diet. Remember, healthy cells mean a healthy cat.

Next month we shall discuss the blood of the cat and try to find out what it is and what it does.

Cats Question Box

Conducted By E. A. Renaux, D.V.M.

A question that I would suspect is not only mine, is one that has to do with sore eyes on cats. The eyes run and have a crusty substance on the rims. I have tried several ointments and boric acid solution but have had no success in cleaning them permanently. Is their a medication for this?

—Mrs. Willard York

Highway 64 West, Bolivar, Tenn.

The use of vitamin A and riboflavin additives or tablets may help. Also there may be either some very small cysts on the inside of the eyelids that would have to be destroyed or there may be some very short tiny hairs growing along the edge of the eyelids and rubbing against the eyeball.

Spook, one-year-old female, has been more or less continually in season for the last two months. She has been with a male within this time, but still has the symptoms of being in season. Is there any method, aside from just waiting, to know if she is pregnant?

—Pamela Ryan

5091 Ridge Rd., Spencerport, N. Y.

In most instances, if a female is in season as you describe the probability of her being pregnant is quite remote. Palpation, or the process of feeling the abdominal area would be the safest way to try and determine whether or not pregnancy existed.

Can you give me the name of any company that will supply a pet owner with some of the recommended drugs for cats? I note that vitamin A should be included in a cat's diet and wonder if it is available in a capsule made for animals. My neutered Persian has been troubled with a urinary condition and I wonder if either egg or milk could aggravate it.

—Mrs. Clifton Morgan

Rt. 2, Box 192, Jackson, Miss.

I know of no company that would do what you ask, any more than they would for supplying drugs for personal use. Almost any vitamin A preparation would be satisfactory to use for cats. The milk or egg should not aggravate the urinary condition.

Being owners of a four-year-old spay Siamese, we are wondering if we will run into any trouble should we buy a kitten and try to have them live together. We have heard both sides to this situation and are confused.

—Mrs. Walter Boyll

6009 DeLay Ave., Glendora, Calif.

The only way that you will know is to get a kitten and see how they get along together. There may be a period during which the atmosphere is charged with suspicion and jealousy, but in the majority of instances this will soon give way and there will be a compatible situation.

The veterinarian has suggested a strict diet of CD for my two altered male cats who have chronic nephritis. Do you consider this necessary and just what makes this food so important?

—Adele Rossland

8855 Bay Pkwy., Brooklyn 14, N. Y.

This diet is especially made for cats and is used in a manner similar to drugs: to correct, or alleviate, or prevent a specific trouble. This particular diet is low in ash content which is considered by some to be the cause of some urinary tract troubles in cats.

What are the symptoms of "yellow fat disease" that comes from feeding a cat all red tuna?

—Doris Hulbert

825 Lakeshore Dr., Delray Beach, Fla.

The animal will become listless and will be reluctant to move. The hind legs may show weakness and the cat will not jump up as usual. Appetite will diminish or disappear. Extreme tenderness in the abdominal area and sometimes over the back will be noted. An elevated temperature is present.

"Frosts," "Lilacs," or Both?

by Lynne Vanderpoel

Not only do different associations use these two terms when referring to what is supposedly the same color class, but also increasing numbers of breeders are noting the wide variation in both point and coat color in this same color class, and concluding that there actually are two separate and distinct colors within what has been lumped together and called "Frosts" or "Lilacs" (depending upon the association concerned). This is analogous to the Chinchilla and Shaded Silver classes in the Longhairs.

While it is true that even the same animal will look far differently under different lighting, and that different judges have a wide range of what is termed "an eye for color," and that there must be individualized interpretation and application of the standards as concerns color, still, when all of these variable factors have been considered we have to return to our original premise—that there are two clearly defined colors within the original conception of the term "Frost" or "Lilac." The logical follow through would be to create and recognize separate classes for judging purposes.

The basic and obvious difference between the two is the "warmth" or pinkness in the coat, the points, and nose and foot leather. The coat appears to be creamy in the Lilac, the pads and nose tip are definitely pink, or mauve and the points are a true pink lilac. A recent article by an English writer reports that the English Lilacs were bred from self-lilac Shorthairs and Siamese. The American Lilacs and Frosts come from pure Siamese background, and the color is obtained from combining the various colors of Siamese in varying degrees of relationship.

The true Frost has a glacial white coat in youth which darkens in maturity, with points that are the palest of gray, and nose and foot leather of light pink or lavender. As the Frost was termed the dilute blue by the earlier writers it is only to be expected that the mature Frosts often appear to the inexperienced eye to be "light Blues." But the nose and foot leather, and the pinkish tint to the points indicate the dilution gene present in both the Frost and Lilac points. The Lilac points, however, seem to hold their coat color throughout the years, and are as creamy as in kittenhood. Their points darken to a lavender and their nose and foot leather assumes a lavender tone.

There are several fallacious ideas about these Frosts and Lilacs: That they mature later than the other Siamese colors. Here where we specialize in this color class we have found that they show an equal development with the other colors along all lines (including sexual maturity). Their point color saturation is well defined and evenly placed at an early age, as is their musculature and general bone structure. There is a second fallacy: That Frosts are smaller than the other colors. The size, body type, and all other factors are determined by the genetic inheritance for these specific factors—size of bone, length of bone, body type, head, and so forth. There are large Frosts, and small Frosts, Frosts with the standardized wedge head, others with the more exaggerated head length that seems to be sweeping the Fancy. In short, all of the differences that are found in other colors are found in the Frosts and Lilacs. As to their delayed sexual maturity, let me relate two incidents which concern the precocity of two of the little "Van Lyncs" . . . One male frost, born February 13 last year, sired a litter of six with his mother while he was still a small kitten. His kittens were born August 6! A female Blue Point whose sire was Frost bore a litter of four on February 17 of this year, when she was just over five months old!

(Next month Mrs. Vanderpoel will discuss and analyze some of her Frost/Lilac breeding experiences.)

(from page 11)

But he came back up the stairs slowly and thoughtfully.

"That's funny," he said. "There was Zipper but there was no mouse. He just sat there looking at me. He certainly must have understood last night that I wasn't fooling. Guess he's given up hunting."

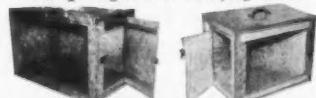

"I doubt it," I said, "but do me a special favor. Let me be the one to go down tomorrow night."

So, next night, there was the call again and when I opened the door there was Zipper with nothing before him. But he took one look at me, turned and scooted under the little fir tree beside the door and dragged out a beautiful big mouse.

"Good cat, Zipper!" I said, but I could hardly speak. I patted his head and closed the door.

Even my husband was impressed. To test Zipper further we took turns going down for several nights but the result was always the same. No mouse until he saw who had opened the door. Then, for me, the hidden prize was promptly dragged forth, for my husband there was only the cold, inimical stare. And, I am happy to report, no one ever took his mouse from him again.

CITY OF CATS

reminiscent of the Egyptian worship of the feline. French cats are often pure black or pure white, sometimes white with a black tail; not the reverse, however. There are gray and yellow tigers, white with black spots, black with white vest and paws, mouse color. These are the so-called common cats, the street and shop cats, les chats de gouttière, the house-top gutter cats. There are some of these, they say, living on the roof-tops of Paris, subsisting on their natural diet. They are not molested.

These cats have thinner and more sharply jointed back legs than American cats, shorter and more flexible tails. Blanchet, the white cat at the hotel could wind his tail around the bedpost. They do not carry their tails high, but this is not from fear, but because the French cat is very busy; he has much to do. People depend upon him to keep the city clean and he attends to this, at the same time supplementing his own diet, since food is precious in France. In personality he is serious rather than playful, and in this he is like his master, who, as a Frenchman is serious, formal and correct in manner. It has often been said that cats assume the characteristics of those with whom they live.

He is an affectionate animal, but he does not seem to need affection, in the way that the American cat does, as a pledge of protection. The French cat is casually affectionate, accepting favors and caresses from whence they may come. People in the cafés feed them from their own plates; they bend down in the streets to pat them. Cats in Paris do not shrink from people; they do not run under things and crouch, looking out cautiously until danger is past. They do not so badly need the special affection and protection of one person, since they are esteemed by everyone. The climate, also, may have something to do with this independence. It is warm enough in winter for them to survive.

It is a curious thing, but even the dogs in Paris do not chase the cats. Of course, the French poodle frequently is on a leash, but even when he is not, he refrains. There is a mildness in the air, something distilled from centuries of living in close quarters. Dogs, cats and people appear to have accepted the amiable formula: "live and let live." Some of this may be due, as well, to the Frenchman's infinite capacity to take pains. He spends time with his animals and loves them, as trips to his magnificent and humane zoos will illustrate. These places are crowded all of the time with people watching and teaching their children to watch the wonders of nature.

On hot days the cats of Paris sleep on the wire screens that are placed above the glass roofs of the inner courts of the apartments and hotels. It is airy here and very private. In the cool of evening, old women come to a certain place near St-Germain-des-Prés with sacks of dry bread and food scraps to feed homeless cats who gather there expectantly. No one laughs. Youths carry kittens on their knapsacks when they go hosteling; and when they tramp back into Paris covered with dust, the kittens are still riding the knapsacks in perfect ease. Postcards, books and paintings feature cats; every book shop has a stand of postcards showing the heads of cats; the photography is excellent, and there are many different poses. On French trains and buses cats are permitted to travel with their owners. They are brought in baskets, and make no trouble. Dogs also show their ability to co-operate when man is willing to take a little time; they travel quietly everywhere.

A chatière is a cat door, a small crescent cut from the bottom of a large door. These are seen everywhere: in houses, apartments, and hotels. The cat is frequently mentioned in French poetry and fiction; the distinguished author, Colette, was famous for the cats in her books and in her own life; French advertising often makes use of the droll and charming characteristics of the cat. There are many veterinary offices in France, and these are decorated exteriorly by fanciful pictures of dogs and cats. A lion-sized cat head looks out from the wall of the Metro (the subway), suggesting Catox for washing the cat. Even the humane activities of Paris seem to have a special spirit of gentleness in the handling of unwanted kittens.

Are there cat calls at night? Is there cat hair on everything? How about sanitation, breakage, danger to children from these fierce beasts, the bird population, infection, and so on! There are occasional cat calls, surprisingly few, which people accept as normal. Occasionally a bucket of water is thrown; everyone has fun. The French are blessedly free from being picky about germs, realizing probably that microbes and man have lived together for a good long time, also that rats carry more germs than cats. Children are taught from the cradle up, to respect animals, and since cats are the gentlest of animals when not mauled, there is no problem.

The cats of Paris grow up in a gentle world, which is, of course, not perfect, but where good will and gentleness toward cats is the rule rather than the exception.

The Back Fence . . .

Spring, with all its romantic implications (and complications) has given way to June. Quite often it is reported, this is the busiest month for Humane Societies all over the country. Such an abundance of offspring—and so many unwanted!

Drury Bird of the El Paso County Humane Society has a column called the Kitten Corner in the El Paso Times. She recently wondered if any of the readers knew of a prayer for a cat. The flood of mail brought many poems and articles but no prayer. The columnist chose to use one of the articles sent in as a feature in the paper and we found it so interesting we want to reprint some of it here. It was submitted by Mrs. E. A. Kincaid.

"Readers who have commented on the curious fact cats are not mentioned in the Bible, although it is the chronicle of a people who were not only contemporary with the cat-worshipping Egyptian, but were closely associated with them, will find interest in a moving legend which appears in an unusual book entitled The Gospel of the Holy Twelve.

"Although this gospel is not included in the canonical books of the Bible, it is vouched for by a clergyman of the Church of England, Rev. G. J. Ouseley, who declared it was a translation of an early Christian document preserved in one of the Buddhist monasteries in Tibet, where it was hidden by some of the Essene community for safety from the hands of corrupters. The book was republished in 1923 by Edson Ltd., London.

"In one of the later chapters we find this legend:

"As Jesus entered a certain village he saw a young cat which had none to care for her and she was hungry and cried unto him and he took her up and put her inside his garment and she lay in his bosom.

"And when he came into the village he set food and drink before the cat and she ate and drank and showed thanks unto him. And he gave her unto one of his disciples who was a widow, whose name was Lorena, and she took care of her.

"And some of the people said, This man careteth for all creatures . . . are they his brothers and sisters that he should love them? And he said unto them, Verily these are your fellow creatures of the great Household of God. And whoso careteth for one of the least of these and giveth it to eat and drink in its need, the same doeth it unto me; and whoso willingly suffereth one of these to be in want and defendeth it not when evilly treated, suffereth the evil as done unto me."

Here indeed is a verse we could all do well to remember and pass on.

There is an essay of great interest by Herbert Wendt, in the March issue of Charm. (A friend who subscribes to many, many magazines, passes on old issues to me. Always three months late in my reading, but better late than . . .)

It is a chapter from the book Road To Man to be published by Doubleday this month.

The title is The Still Untamed Domestic Animal and it does a good and complete job of tracing the habits, nature and history of the house cat back to the Caffre cat, the wild cat of Egypt and the Near East where it was sacred as the nocturnal personification of the moon goddess.

Even Germanic tribes revered the wildcat (which was not related to the Caffre cat) as Frigga's animal.

Today house cats are either practical rodent catchers or delightful pets. For us, the cat is a true example of art for art's sake. The cat pleases the cat and if you, too, are happy, it is good, but not essential.

Today's cats, wild and domestic, follow the same pattern of life as the reputed mother of the species, the Caffre. The house cat has lost practically none of the natural traits in her association with man. Breeding them for our purposes hasn't changed them as the dog, the horse and the ox were changed. The priest of Bast wanted to behold them in the temple exactly as they were in nature. This is how we love them now. This is why so much about them seems mysterious and strange.

And strange it is when two clippings, one from Los Angeles and the other from Dallas, come in to thin desk on the same day, both dealing with cats and chicks.

The L. A. Examiner has a photo of Bobo, a cat, and Snowball, a hen making like Damon and Pythias . . . Castor and Pollux. The story goes that, about a year ago when Bobo's feline friend got lost, this lonely fellow went out and found himself an injured but still alive chicken. He dragged it home and his owners nursed the fowl back to health. Bobo contributed with daily bath and necessary warmth by cuddling his new found comrade.

The Dallas News itemized a white Leghorn hen who took over the care of a five-kitten litter of a mother cat who was one of a litter the same Leghorn had raised last year. Confused? It's nothing, when you consider what these small kittens are going through.

Blackie, the mother cat, does sneak in to feed her family when the other girls in the flock start picking on the wandering cat babies and the feathered mother has to do some chicken-pecking. The kittens have learned to answer the Leghorn's clucking and the owner of these mixed-up kids probably wonders if there is a remedy for hairballs in chickens or feather-hills in cats.

PUSS 'n BOOTS GIVES CATS "Health you can see!"

Only a superior cat food could show such obvious results so quickly

There's a world of difference between owning "a cat" and owning a "healthy, lively cat". Because a healthy cat means one with a good disposition, fur like the softest silk, and eyes that glisten like precious stones... and therefore a cat that gives you more pleasure.

Because it is a quality cat food—formulated and manufactured under the rigid supervision of experts in cat nutrition—Puss 'n Boots shows results quickly. It creates improved vitality, glossier coats, stronger teeth—all the qualities that you recognize in a cat which is in top looks and top health.

There's no mystery about the ingredients: whole fish caught from the clean sea and processed for luscious palatability, selected cereals that have ripened in the sun, and extra quantities of Vitamins B₁ and E.

Together they spell Puss 'n Boots, America's largest-selling cat food. And together they spell pride and pleasure for you, for you'll own a more beautiful, more companionable pet.

How the Natural Life Balance of WHOLE FISH is Retained in Puss 'n Boots

Costly Fillets, rich in essential proteins. Usually reserved for human consumption, but retained in healthful Puss 'n Boots.

Liver and Glands, for minerals and vitamins. Vital for health. Often extracted for medicinal use, but retained in healthful Puss 'n Boots.

Bone Structure, for valuable calcium and phosphorus. Made crumbly and digestible, and retained in healthful Puss 'n Boots.
